

Toys from the 1960s

The Barbie Dream House debuted in 1962. The house was portable and furniture was included.

The G.I. Joe line of action figures was introduced in 1964. The line's development led to the coining of the term "action figure" to appeal more to boys.

Chatty Cathy first appeared in stores and in commercials in 1960. The doll was the inspiration for the 1963 Twilight Zone episode titled "Living Doll."

Originally from Denmark, troll dolls became one of the biggest toy fads in the United States during the early 1960s.

The Etch A Sketch was launched in the United States in 1960. It originally had a plate glass screen. The toy was later redesigned with a plastic screen.

Hot Wheels cars were introduced in 1968. The first production line of cars is known as "The Original Sweet 16."

Although children have played with yo-yos since ancient times, the toy became really popular in the United States after a television ad campaign by Duncan Toys Co. in the 1960s.